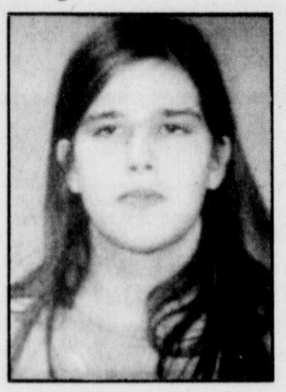
Body of missing local woman found, murder is suspected

Police believe they have found the remains of Melodee Dawn Wagner, a local woman missing since Jan. 7.

The remains were found July 6 near county roads 22 and 118 in Yolo County, and a police press release stated that "evidence indicates that Wagner's death was due to foul play and that her death occurred near the date of her disappearance."



Melodee Dawn Wagner

Wagner, a Maple St. resident, disappeared after an argument with two people at about 1 p.m. on Jan. 7. She lived with her boyfriend and four children.

Anyone with information on the case is asked to contact Detective Dave Duckett or Det. Ray Bombardier at 373-5870 or 372-2461.

Internal investigation ends:

Two accused officers back on duty

By David Weller

Officers Donald Donoho and Jeffrey Neuman returned to their jobs Friday at the West Sacramento Police Department following a disciplinary hearing on Tuesday.

The police department has declined to state what kind of disciplinary actions were taken against the officers. The hearing could have resulted in actions ranging from dismissal or suspension to reprimands or no action at all.

Tuesday's hearings were the last of the legal proceedings Donoho and Neuman will have to face in connection with the February 8 arrest of Jesse Beltran, 27.

The district attorney brought felony assault charges against them after an internal police department investigation allegedly found evidence that excessive force had been used during the arrest.

The charges were dropped last month after a preliminary hearing when Municipal Court Judge W. Arvid Johnson found insufficient evidence to hold a trial.

The officers had been placed on unpaid administrative leave pending the outcome of the court hearing. When the charges were dropped, they were placed on paid leave.

Beltran, found to be violating his parole at the time of his arrest, has been returned to prison. He has also been accused of robbing a store on West Capitol Avenue after being released from his February 8 arrest.

Police chief's report sights health hazards, fire danger in crackdown on campsites

By David Weller

With an eye toward preventing people from setting up camp-sites along the river, the police department will ask the city council to consider making unregulated camping illegal within the city limits tonight.

A report prepared for the council by Lieutenant Ron Moore states that "unregulated camping in the city has created many environmental problems for the city as well as its residents.

"In most camps, there is a degradation of land, and health and safety violations are extreme. The camp sites are often extremely littered with garbage, human feces, hypodermic syringes, and alcohol containers.

"In the past, several city departments, including public works, code enforcement, police department and fire department have cleaned up the area, at the taxpayers' expense, and returned a short time later only to find similar problems."

The report went on to say that the fire department put out 77 illegal camp fires in 1994, and also responded to several fires that were out of control along the river.

Study for new sewage plant estimates facility's impact on river

■ Environmental impacts for new city sewage plant, paper plant are outlined in study -- and may define the battle lines in a coming controversy

By Steve Marschke

A draft environmental impact report on the proposed new West Sacramento Wastewater Treatment Plant was released for public review July 7.

The new plant (to be located on 141 acres near the city's southern limits) is intended to handle 22.4 million gallons per day of city sewage. Almost a third of that volume is expected to come from the planned MacMillan Bloedel/Haindl Papier newsprint recycling plant slated for the Southport Industrial Park near the Port of Sacramento.

The remainder of the volume would be used by other city residents and services, including about 40,000 planned to live in the city's largely undeveloped Southport region.

Because the draft environmental impact report (EIR) provides a first look at the impact the paper plant will have on the Sacramento River and Delta areas from its treated sewage, the document may set the stage for a battle over the paper plant.

West Sacramento has already granted approval to MacMillan Bloedel (a Vancouver-based corporation with logging and natural resource interests) for the plant, providing an agreement can be worked out for sewage treatment. The city has signed a development agreement with the company granting it certain construction and operation rights.

A representative of the Sacramento Valley Toxics Campaign, which settled a lawsuit with West Sacramento in part by obtaining an agreement to reduce the planned $1.5 billion paper recycling facility by one third, said Tuesday his organization has not yet reviewed the new EIR. A group spokesman said last year that the organization planned to give the document close scrutiny.

The sewage plant EIR details many possible impacts that the facility could have on people, wildlife, air quality, water quality and other factors. But the core of any political battles is ex-

Still no cause found for fatal accident June 10 on Jefferson Boulevard

By Steve Marschke

Toxicology tests showed no alcohol in the bloodstream of 17-year old Erika Crowell, who was killed July 10 in a two-car accident on Jefferson Blvd. near Devon Rd.

Lt. Russ Thomas of the West Sacramento Police Department said investigators do not yet have blood test results from Harold Horner, 55, who was the other driver involved in the 3:30 a.m. crash.

But he added that "there is no reason to believe that Horner is anything but another innocent victim" of the accident.

Horner is recovering from his injuries.

The accident occurred on a straight section of the boulevard, which is a state highway.

"She was coming from a friend's house," said Thomas. "For some unknown reason, she lost control of her vehicle and spun into the oncoming lane."

Thomas said police investigators are still working on determining the speed of the two vehicles from physical evidence. They did find some pieces of "pallet type" wood in the road, and a piece on the underside of Crowell's Honda Prelude.

It might be that Crowell swerved on the road to try to avoid the wood, he said, or she may have swerved for some other reason such as trying to avoid an animal.

Two young men who stopped shortly after the crash were located last week following an appeal in the News-Ledger. But the two turned out to have not been direct witnesses of the accident, although they were able to confirm some details found on the scene, said Thomas.

"For family members and for ourselves, we'd really like to know what caused this accident," Thomas commented. "But the truth is we may never know."

Funeral services for Crowell were held Thursday at the Capital Christian Center. A family member estimated that about 400 people attended.

Crowell, a West Sacramento resident, had graduated from Davis High School in June and planned to attend California State University, Sacramento, in the fall.

She had worked as a courtesy clerk at Raley's in West Sacramento for almost a year.

Council picks Potnick as '95-96 mayor

By David Weller

In a smooth transition of power, City Councilman Greg Potnick began his second term as mayor of West Sacramento last week. Bill Kristoff was elected mayor pro-tem.

Both elections were by unanimous vote of the council. Traditionally the mayoral term lasts for one year.

Although the elections have been changed from June to November of even numbered years, the council did not address the possibility of changing the mayoral term to follow the election of new council members.

If the mayoral term is not changed before the end of the current term in July 1996, the city could possibly find itself with a new mayor or mayor pro-tem appointed in July facing re-election the following October.

Bike lane compromise for West Cap

By David Weller

The city council voted Wednesday to approve a compromise version of the bike lanes proposal for West Capitol Avenue it had put on an indefinite hold less than two months ago.

The proposal to use a $60,000 state grant to paint bike lanes down the length of West Capitol Avenue received vocal opposition from the West Sacramento Chamber of Commerce, the Hotel-Motel Association, and the Downtown Association because the proposed bike lanes would have required a parking prohibition along West Capitol.

The compromise approved by the council calls for striping and a parking prohibition in all areas except for the downtown business district between Poplar Avenue and Jefferson Blvd, and in the short distance between the railroad underpass and the Tower bridge on the east end of town.

If the state decides that the proposed compromise is close enough to the original proposal that it still warrants the grant, the bike route will complete the 50 mile regional bike trail running from Folsom Lake to Davis.

It will be the final link, connecting the American River Bike Path, which runs from Folsom through Discovery Park and Old Sacramento, and the bike lanes that run from Davis to West Sacramento across the Yolo Causeway.

Opponents of the parking prohibition argued that local businesses would suffer if cars were not allowed to park on the street.

In favor of the parking prohibition, the police department has argued that making parking illegal along West Capitol would assist police officers in enforcement of prostitution

'Cheaper' store issue bounces back to planning commission

By David Weller

Consideration of granting permission to the Customer Company to build a Cheaper store in Southport will once again go to the planning commission for consideration.

The city council sent the matter to the commission to consider the findings of a traffic study submitted by the discount grocery firm to the city early this month.

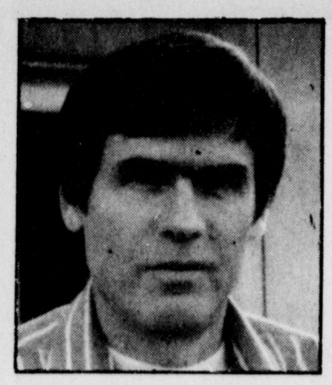
In a letter to Steve Patek, West Sacramento's Community Development Director, Alan Telford of Fehr and Peers Associates, which had been the consultant handling the traffic study for the city, declined further involvement in the project.

"Based on recent conversations with Ned Rosco (of The Customer Company) concerning potential litigation, we have rethought our position on performing this work and have decided to decline any further involvement in this project.

The new consultant, Omni-Means, was hired by The Customer Company.

'Dear Daryl' answers a plea from a certain Brit actor. . .

My Back Pages



By Daryl Fisher

If you'll recall, a few weeks ago I happened to mention that one of my secret ambitions was to someday be one of those famous advice columnists like Ann Landers or Abigail Van Buren. I mean, how hard can it be to read a couple of letters everyday and tell the poor tortured souls who write them to go see a counselor?

Anyway, with the encouragement of a friend who is absolutely convinced that the News-Ledger will triple its number of subscriptions if it prints an advice column, I decided to give it the old college try and I included a few practice questions and answers in my July 5th column. Well, much to the surprise of everyone but my friend, the response has been incredible! Countless letters filled with questions demanding advice from 'Dear Daryl' have been flooding into the News-Ledger and Steve Marschke (my editor) has ordered me to put everything else aside and use this column to answer as many of them as I possibly can.

"But Steve," I said, "what will the community do if they have to go a whole week without hearing about my kids or the war in Vietnam?"

"We're just going to have to chance it," said Steve with obvious concern.

"But look at all of these," I said, glancing down at the huge stack of mail that had arrived for me. "I can't possibly answer this many letters in one column."

"I don't want any excuses," said Steve, pounding his fist on his desk as he often does when he has a tough decision to make, "these people are hurting! They need answers!"

"Okay, okay," I said, "I guess I can push back my next attack on the Unabomber for another week."

"Good," said Steve, nodding his appreciation. "And if I were you," he added with conviction, "I'd answer the letter Hugh Grant sent you first."

"Hugh Grant?" I asked, shocked. "You're kidding? Hugh Grant sent me a 'Dear Daryl' letter?"

"That's right," Steve assured me, pointing to an opened envelope with no return address on it. "I put it right on top of the pile."

"You don't actually mean Hugh Grant the movie star, do you? Not that great looking English guy who -- well, you know."

"That's the one, alright," said Steve. "And it's a pretty long letter, too. He's obviously in a lot of pain. So even if you don't have enough space to get to all the others this week, make sure you do his."

"How come?" I asked, definitely not wanting to start down that slippery road where I begin responding to the problems of the rich and famous before those of my fellow West Sacramentans.

"Because women all over the whole world are mad at him," explained Steve with compassion. "How would you like to be in that poor man's shoes?"

"You're right," I said, ashamed of myself. "I'll go home and get right on it."

 Dear Daryl: I'm just a poor, lonely bloke who was visiting your beautiful county a few weeks ago promoting my new movie, Nine Months (people are already calling me the new Cary Grant) when I quite innocently decided to go for a little car ride down Hollywood's famous Sunset Boulevard. Much to my surprise, as I was stopped at an intersection waiting for the light to turn green, a very aggressive young lady who I had never seen before in my whole life suddenly leaped into my vehicle (now I know why most American males always keep their doors locked) and before I knew what was happening, she was yanking on the fly of my trousers and demanding $60. I fought her off for as long as I could, but just as our struggle was about to reach a climax, a police officer who I assumed was coming to my rescue stuck his flashlight into the car and arrested me.

I tried to tell him my side of the story, but I soon realized that Americans are just not as trusting and understanding as we Brits. Now I've become the butt of everyone's jokes and my stunningly beautiful girlfriend is refusing to sleep in my bed. My stupid agent advised me to just go on all the American late-night talk shows and good naturedly accept all the blame, but the fact that I'm actually an innocent man who has been falsely accused is starting to drive me bloody crazy. How do you think all my fans would react if I just came out and told everyone the real truth? Sign me, Victimized in LA.

Dear Victimized in LA: First of all, I want to assure you that men everywhere share your pain and know exactly how it must feel to be rich, famous, living with a gorgeous model and forced to fight off adoring women holding up signs which read, "I would have paid you!" everywhere you go. So, my advice to you is really quite simple. Without blowing your own trumpet -- which you say you don't like to do -- just go ahead and publicly come out with your side of the story as soon as possible.

Remember, this is America, where we can manage to talk about a problem as earth-shattering as yours for a good six months, and where half of the people still think O.J. is innocent.

HERE IS A PLEASANT LITTLE GAME that will give you a message every day. It's a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner and check one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

OPINION

News-Ledger Editorial

Mixed grill:

The bike lane plan adopted by the West Sacramento City Council last Wednesday is a pretty good compromise, and the five-person board ought to get some points for pretty much reversing an earlier decision.

The compromise is a good one particularly if plans to continue allowing parking along West Capitol Ave. for one stretch -- from Poplar to Jefferson -- remain only temporary, until a better solution for area businesses can be found and the dedicated bike lane can be extended.

A bikes-only lane near the curb would, for one thing, be safer for cyclists.

It will also, as previously pointed out, help provide one more tool police can use to discourage the prostitution trade. Elsewhere on the avenue, it will be illegal for cars to pull to the curb (whether for customers to chat with hookers, or for legitimate purposes), and police will be able to contact drivers who do.

So with Wednesday night's action, did the council inadvertently create a "Prostitution Zone" on West Capitol from Poplar to Jefferson?

On the more perplexing side, consider that West Sacramento's wise leaders have already made some commitments to allow the MacMillan Bloedel paper plant.

Now, for the first time (and well after certain legal obligations were made), we get a look at what, exactly, we have bought. We now have a report detailing the environmental impacts the plant will have on the city's sewage stream, the Sacramento River, and the Delta.

Naturally, some of these impacts are worse than expected. And don't be surprised if someone (such as a local environmental group or a downstream water user like the Contra Costa Water District or even L.A.'s Metropolitan Water District) sues over it.

Guess who will help pay the legal fees defending this plant, whose full impacts are just now becoming open to discussion?

That's right, you will: the City of West Sacramento will be right in the middle of any fight over the paper plant and the river.

Okay, everyone else is having some fun at this guy's expense, including our top-of-page-two columnist.

So how about this suggestion:

Hugh Grant should be the grand marshal for West Sacramento's annual Community Day Parade down West Capitol Avenue.

(Maybe Divine Brown can be invited to join him, waving from the back seat of a car?)

Letters to the Editor

Thanks from cop

I would like to take this opportunity to publicly thank the members of my family and the citizens and businesses of West Sacramento who supported me and my family over the last five-and-a-half months. I would also like to thank all the members of the West Sacramento Police Officers and Firefighters Associations for their endless work on the fundraiser dinner on June 24. Without their help, the dinner would not have been the success it was. The money we raised will be going to help pay a portion of the legal costs that I incurred during this time.

As a resident of West Sacramento, it was very encouraging to receive so much support from the citizens, the donations from the business community for the fundraiser, and from members of our city council.

As of July 12, I have returned to duty and will be back on the streets once again.

Thanks from family

The family of Jack Dunlap wants to thank the entire West Sacramento community for all the very thoughtful things you have done in his memory.

We feel the tree planted in the little league park was an excellent choice, as Jack's first interest was in athletics and sports that would help keep the youth of the area occupied. He was very community-oriented and gave his best measure.

Again, we thank each of you for all the kindnesses shown his family.

Pro bike-lane

Regarding the bike lane discussion currently before the West Sacramento City Council and the related News-Ledger front page article and editorial, I wish to add my support for street access for cyclists.

To refute the president of the Downtown Association, who doubts that "adding...bike lanes will do a thing for the business climate of West Sacramento," here are four reasons why lanes could enhance business:

1) Cyclists have money and do shop (some new bikes costs more than a used car);

2) Adding more bicycles as an alternate form of transportation will reduce smog within the city, thus making the business sector more comfortable and breathable;

3) Cycling promotes health and longer lives, and both conditions encourage shopping;

4) Bicycle lanes will draw more people and probably new bicycle-related businesses into the community (witness the healthy economic climate of K Street in Sacramento, bordered with bike lanes).

Whether the lanes are provided on West Capitol Avenue or a parallel street may not be such an important issue: cyclists are not out to beat the clock as car commuters are. And as in downtown Sacramento, there may be ways to accommodate parking and the lanes. The advent of bike lanes, in any way, shape or form, however, would be a most welcome addition to my hometown.

From LeFever

There is a time to admit what you can do, and a time to admit what you can not.

Throughout these past several months, as I joined my neighbors in waiting for, guessing about and encouraging actions concerning the future of McClellan AFB, I have been asked to comment publicly on the situation.

To date, I have limited my comments to issuing press releases and other statements encouraging the BRAC and the President not to burden California with yet another base closure. Now I will discuss in more detail the roots of this crisis and how it could have been avoided.

Let me begin by saying that I congratulate the workers of McClellan, community activists, and even my opponent -- Vic Fazio -- on their recent activities and persistence. But, let me also say that I share in a belief that we were betrayed in California. Our Air Force Base was made a pawn in a game that had more to do with political futures than it did with national security or economics.

As I stated in a recent letter to the President, McClellan AFB should have been spared not only because of the loss of jobs and harm to our local economy, but because the proposed closure compromises American safety.

When American closes so many military installations in the state that is the gateway to the Pacific, it sends the wrong message to a still dangerous world. Like an invitation to petty dictators throughout the world, we communicate a message that the United States has lost its resolve. And when this message is communicated by a president who is perceived to hold the military in contempt, this message can be disastrous.

But, we need not have reached this point of deciding the fate of McClellan.

In the 1960's, when my father worked at McClellan, we did not have to worry every two years that the base would be closed. We knew that our elected representatives were committed to keeping McClellan open because it was crucial to the safety of our country.

In the decades that followed, we heard repeated cries to cut our military, both in size and in budget. When budget cuts became base closures in elected leaders' back yard, political concerns exposed hypocrisy. Those who had been loudest in their calls to cut the military now posed as the champions of this local facility.

The base closure process, designed to insulate military decisions from election year exploitation, became political. Suddenly, elected representatives gave false hope and took unearned credit when they claimed influence over this process. They seized the victory as their own when McClellan was spared in 1993.

In my campaign, this exploitation reached its highest level on election day 1994. When Vic Fazio posed at McClellan's front gate with a sign that read "If LeFever Wins McClellan Closes," he implied that he could save McClellan from this fate.

Moreover, he implied that he could defuse a time-bomb that he and his allies planted years before when they repeatedly called for military cuts.

Vic Fazio did not save McClellan in 1993 and he did not have the influence to do so in 1995. He did have the power to save McClellan years before. But Fazio traded that future for a blur of less important spending.

Nin-com-poops

First let me say Amen to Mr. Vince Frugoli and William E. Williams for their letters to the News-Ledger. This mismanagement crew we have running the show in this city is a no-growth, anti-business (except for warehouses) bunch of nin-com-poops we ever could have voted into office, with their wrangling on and on about having a Cheaper store in Southport.

I have talked to people living in the area who told me there is more traffic on the Jefferson Blvd. bridge with people living in Southport who have to cross that bridge to go shopping in the stores north of the bridge than there would be traffic going to shop at a Cheaper Store in Southport. The only increase there would be would be in traffic on the bridge, with delivery trucks who make their deliveries between rush hours. I wonder just how much Raley's, Safeway and Big R might have to say in the decision not to allow a Cheaper store in Southport? People living south of the bridge have to cross the bridge just to buy milk, bread and coffee, etc., which would be obtainable without crossing the bridge. But, as Vince said, this lock step three on the city council are making all the decisions of which we all have to live by.

This may sound pathetic to council members, but we are getting fed up to the gunnels having to go out of town to buy our bed sheets, pillow cases, underwear and socks, etc. What we need is a city council who would work to get a Target, K-Mart or Wal-Mart, or maybe a Payless store in West Sacramento, who handle more than just groceries. The Chamber of Commerce wants us to spend our money in West Sacramento (on what?).

The way politics work -- when they get in office, we can't get rid of them. So, ladies and gentlemen, we should remember come election time.

I would think there would be enough people with brains on the city council to figure out a way to come up with a way to attract more people to this city, other than Johns looking for hookers.

What we don't need is a paper plant and more traffic in and out of the port.

Arrested:

West Sacto auto shop owner is accused of selling phony insurance

From the California Department of Insurance

Investigators for the California Department of Insurance and the Yolo County District Attorney's Office arrested un unlicensed West Sacramento insurance agent and auto repair shop owner Monday on suspicion of felony grand theft after he allegedly stole clients' premiums and provided them phony certificates of insurance.

Manuel Cueto Pereyra of West Sacramento was booked on three felony counts of grand theft, 11 felony counts of forgery and one misdemeanor count of selling insurance without a license following a lengthy investigation by the CDI Investigation Bureau an the Yolo County District Attorney's Office.

"Bad apples like this give legitimate insurance agents a bad name," said insurance commissioner Chuck Quackenbush. "But I intend to weed them out, and then throw them out of the insurance business and straight into jail."

In 1984, Pereyra was convicted on auto theft and solicitation to commit grand theft. Following that conviction, the Department of Insurance revoked his license to sell insurance. Pereyra allegedly continued to sell insurance, sometimes stealing clients' premium payments and given them phony certificates of insurance coverage.

Recently, Pereyra has also operated a brake and tire repair store on West Capitol Avenue in West Sacramento.

Pereyra was released after posting a $5,000 bail. Because of his prior felony conviction, if convicted on all of the current charges he could be sentenced to six years in prison.

Street) left parking to continue on a most important segment: from Poplar Avenue to Jefferson Blvd. By continuing to allow parking on this busy stretch of West Capitol Avenue, you can bet parking will became very congested on West Capitol Ave. and make exiting off-street parking even more dangerous, especially when the big truck rigs are parked just short of an entry/exit of any off-street parking.

Cases in point: try exiting onto West Capitol Avenue from the Raley's lot or try crossing that juncture as a pedestrian or walk east past the first entrance to Bank of America when big truck rigs are parked just west of those junctures. If one cannot see in order to make a safe exit or cross the sidewalk safely, we continue to have a formula for disaster and lawsuits...and higher insurance rates, too.

Having bike lanes next to the curb is not only safer than bike lanes "between parked vehicles and the right lane of traffic" (which has potential for accidents when parked driver opens the door for exit from/entry to car), but having established lanes for bikes will naturally "put bikes in their place." And we don't have room for bike lanes and continued parking. Not only should the words, "bike lane" be painted every so many feet, but we should also paint arrows giving bicyclists the message that they should travel in the same direction as motor vehicle traffic...and off the sidewalk, too. This should go a long way in making it safer for those waiting for the bus: too often as we get up to board the bus, along comes a "wrong-way, high-speed bike" within inches of us. Bike lanes should give our police force more leverage in reducing those meandering bicyclists who now ignore signals and make the job of motor vehicle drivers ever so difficult trying to keep from hitting the bicyclist when the latter too often does little let the former know where the latter is!

In the "good ol' days," the traffic was not as congested, property was not as speculative, truck rigs weren't as long or as wide and we did not have the smog problems we have today.

We still need a truck stop/layover area, either off-street or in our Industrial Park area. All of West Capitol Avenue should be "no parking" by (say) two years hence.

Librarian gets 'crowned' as 3,785 sign up for cards

Jay Johnstone, the branch librarian at the Arthur F. Turner Library, is wearing a royal plastic crown this week to honor a pledge he made during national Library Week that he would wear the crown if over 3,000 people signed up for library at his West Sacramento branch this year.

Some 3,785 people registered for library cards in West Sacramento this year, exceeding the library's goal of 3,000. Staff members at the library are celebrating the achievement because it brings the total of borrowers registered in the past two years to 9,491—approximately 29 percent of the West Sacramento service area. The eventual goal is to register at least one-third of the population. The library staff expects to sign up the next 1,500 to 3,000 people by July, 1996.

Librarian Johnstone explained that the number of registered borrowers is one measure of the library's performance, others being total materials loaned, the number of reference questions answered, attendance at library events and the number of people using the facility daily.

"The library is often referred to as the People's University," Johnstone said. "We have 9,491 independent learners in West Sacramento who use the library for life-long learning. We are also like the fire department: Even if you never have to call us, we will be ready of you need us. We are an essential part of a successful community."

Council to discuss budget tonight

■ New city budget assumes little new interference from state legislature, keeps local spending about the same as last year

By Steve Marschke

In putting together the proposed 1995-96 city of West Sacramento budget, city manager Joe Goeden said it was "real easy this year -- we just told the department heads you can't spend more than you did last year," he said.

The result is a $14.3 million general fund budget that pretty much maintains funding for police, fire and parks departments at 1994-95 levels.

"The biggest (cut in revenues) in there is probably the road fund," said Goeden. The city's road fund, which represents the local share of gasoline taxes, will fall from $784,000 last year to a projected $556,000 this year, affecting the city's ability to build and maintain roads.

The city budget allows a continuing reserve of about $1.9 million, which Goeden calls a "healthy" reserve.

"We need a healthy reserve at this time," he commented. "Formerly, the facilities fund had the reserves, but the facilities money is basically gone. The only cash we have in reserve is the general reserve."

Goeden said the proposed budget assumes no more drastic budget shifts imposed by the state legislature, which has in recent years drawn money away from local governments to help reduce the California deficit.

In the past three to four years, about $1.5 million has been lost from the annual city general fund budget due to state actions and to the California recession.

The city's redevelopment agency -- a special city district designed to re-route taxes towards redevelopment of blighted areas (as well as development of some vacant ones) -- is also "pretty much status quo," said Val Toppenberg, the agency's deputy director.

"We've been hit (by the state) for the last three years running," he explained. "Last year, we had to write a check for about $250,000."

The 12-person agency will have about $6 million in revenue available for all its projects, and about $2.8 million will go towards debt service.

The agency has put about $3.3 million into the current Harbor Blvd. widening project, said Toppenberg, and will set as high priorities the development of Raley's Landing and Lighthouse Marina along the northeastern riverfront in the near future.

Goeden said that the city of West Sacramento eliminated 27 positions during recent years of budget cuts, but most of that was accomplished through hiring freezes and other methods.

"Only two cuts resulted in people having to be laid off," he stated.

Compromise on West Capitol:

laws.

Because of the law enforcement argument, Councilman Roland Hensley spoke in favor of the parking prohibition and the bike lanes as originally proposed. "I do think its the best tool we've had in a long time to deal with the prostitutes, and for that reason I support it," he said.

When it became apparent that the proposal which included a parking prohibition was not going to pass, however, Hensley voted along with the other council members to approve the compromise plan.

Arguing against the parking prohibition, Duane Johnson from the Chamber of Commerce spoke on, from the Chamber of Commerce argued that bike lanes should not be imposed on the downtown area if the parking prohibition will hurt business.

About the city's general plan, which provides for bike lanes along West Capitol, Johnson said, "I don't see anywhere in there where the city ever supported a bike lane at the expense of parking."

The businesses that expect to be hurt by a parking prohibition include a jewelry store, a travel agency, a barber shop, and the motels along West Capitol, which allow truckers to park their 18 wheel trucks to park on the street.

Delta Travel and the barber shop, which share a building between West Acre and Jefferson, would have lost all the parking with access to the front entrance of the building if the parking prohibition would have passed.

City Engineer Joe Loop told the council that a Caltrans official he met with could not guarantee that state funds would be available for the compromise plan because it does not stripe the entire length of West Capitol as originally proposed.

The official told Loop, however, that he thought the compromise would be acceptable if it were considered to be a temporary solution, and permanent striping were planned for the future.

pected to be the sewage plant's impact on the Sacramento River from its discharges near Clarksburg.

If the plant is built as intended, and serves the paper plant as planned, some of the impacts (according to the EIR) would be:

■ A "potentially significant" amount of cyanide released in the waste stream could be successfully reduced if MacMillan Bloedel includes some pre-treatment procedures for cyanide at its plant. The company also could be required to conduct a study to determine additional necessary measures, beyond a hydrogen peroxide process, to reduce cyanide discharge to "less than significant levels."

If mitigation measures are not undertaken by the paper plant, sewage discharges could exceed five percent "of the remaining Sacramento River assimilative capacity" for cyanide.

■ The sewage discharge into the river would have "significant, unavoidable" impacts on the temperature of the river's water. The impact would be significant even after mitigation measures, which could include cooling towers, heat exchangers or cooling ponds built by MacMillan Bloedel.

■ No mitigation measures are available to prevent "significant, unavoidable" discharges of mercury which would exceed five percent of the river's assimilative capacity.

■ Likewise, the sewage plant would discharge "significant, unavoidable" amounts of total dissolved solids (TDS) causing in "operational changes in water supply management" for water users downstream.

The EIR presents several alternatives to building the plant, including building a smaller plant and either reducing planned city development, eliminating plans for the paper plant, or continuing operation of the current city sewage plant on South River Road.

When evaluating the alternative of building the new plant at a 16 million gallon per day capacity -- enough to handle the city's anticipated growth but without construction of the paper plant -- the EIR refers to an earlier study by Larry Walker and Associates of Davis assessing the environmental impact.

This plan "is not expected to result in significant direct or cumulative impacts on water quality," the report said. But eliminating the paper plant would violate the city's development agreement with MacMillan Bloedel, the EIR also states.

The report was prepared by EIP Associates of Sacramento. A copy is available for review at the Turner Branch Library at Merkley Avenue or for purchase at the city's community development department, 1951 South River Road.

The EIR's review period ends Aug. 21, and the city will hold a public hearing to accept comments on the EIR.
